The disclosure is objected to because of the following informalities: In the specification on page 13 Table 1 "C" appears to be erroneous, and should be changed to – B –.

Appropriate correction is required.

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over WO 02/072482 A2 Weir et al.. Weir et al disclose (see pages 2-6) a process of dewatering an aqueous suspension substantially as claimed. The claims differ from Weir et al. by reciting that the polymer only partially inverts to bring about flocculation and thickening of the suspension, and then fully inverts during further dewatering to form a cake. It is submitted that the reverse phase polymer added in the process of Weir et al. would appear to invert in the suspension to bring about flocculation, thickening, and cake formation as in the instant process, since the same polymers and amounts appear to be utilized to dewater the same types of aqueous suspensions. It would have been obvious to one skilled in the art to modify the process of Weir et al. by utilizing the recited polymer inversion, to aid in dewatering the suspension. The specific weight percent and intrinsic viscosity of the polymer, would have been an obvious matter of process optimization to one skilled in the art, depending on the specific suspension treated and results desired absent a sufficient showing of unexpected results.

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.
